

The budget required to set up a center for information provision on sexual reproductive health can vary depending on various factors such as location, size, infrastructure needs, equipment, staffing, and ongoing operational costs.

Infrastructure: This includes the cost of securing or renting a suitable space for the center, renovation or set-up of the facility, furniture, fixtures, and equipment needed to create a conducive environment for information provision - approximate cost range: $10,000

Information Resources: This includes the cost of procuring or developing educational materials, brochures, pamphlets, posters, interactive tools, and technological resources (computers, internet access, audio-visual aids) to disseminate information effectively - approximate cost range: $2,000

Staffing: Estimate the cost of hiring and training dedicated staff members to oversee the center's operations, such as program coordinators, counselors, and administrative support - approximate cost range: $2000

Outreach and Awareness: Consider the cost of marketing and promoting the center's services, conducting community outreach programs, organizing workshops or events, and developing awareness campaigns - approximate cost range $1000

Operational Expenses: Account for ongoing expenses such as utilities (electricity, water), maintenance, office supplies, internet connectivity, and technology upgrades - approximate cost range: $5,000

Training and Capacity Building: Allocate funds for staff training, professional development, and capacity-building initiatives to ensure the center is equipped to provide accurate and up-to-date information - approximate cost range. $2000

It is important to note that the above cost estimates are rough approximations and can vary significantly based on the specific context, location, and scope of the project. It is advisable to conduct a detailed budget analysis considering local market prices, in-kind support, and available resources to develop an accurate budget plan for setting up the information center.